This architectural drawing shows a floor plan of a building. It features a central vertical corridor that divides the space into two large, symmetrical rooms. The rooms have a trapezoidal shape, being wider at the bottom and narrower at the top. At the top of the plan, there is a smaller rectangular area, possibly an entrance or a small room, which is also divided by the central corridor. The drawing uses simple lines to represent walls, doors, and the central axis. There are some faint markings and lines around the perimeter, possibly indicating a larger context or a section line.
