Architectural section drawing of a building, showing a cross-section with a large central hall and a smaller room on the left. The drawing is labeled "Section" and includes dimensions and structural details.

This architectural section drawing illustrates the internal structure of a building. It features a central red-shaded area, likely representing a core or a specific functional zone. The drawing includes various floor levels, indicated by dashed lines and labels such as '0.00', '0.15', and '0.30'. The building's exterior walls and roof structure are also depicted, with a central entrance area visible. The drawing is a technical representation of the building's internal layout and structural elements.
