

The architectural drawing consists of two parts. On the left is a site plan showing a rectangular plot divided into several smaller rectangular sections, some of which are shaded. To the right of the site plan is a long section view of a building. The section shows multiple bays or units, each with its own roofline and internal structure. The drawing is detailed with various lines indicating walls, windows, doors, and structural elements.